

First cruise in the Relave.

1851.

This year Mr Smith parted with the Relave and acquired the Waver a much larger and in every way more commodious yacht. But she was very different than from what she became afterwards under the many judicious improvements which Mr Smith made upon her. She appeared very good to me however when on Mr Smith's invitation I went on board on (I think) the 26th of September - for I never had been on board any other yacht but the Relave and the much larger Annemore and superior accommodation of the Waver struck me as something very fine indeed. The Cabin of the Relave was, necessarily, very small and the mast came down through it - being on one side of it, when I first saw it, the marks of the heels of Dr. Scudder's boots which in a former cruise had been indented in it by the Doctor supporting himself against the mast while the yacht lay on her beam ends on one occasion when she had run aground. At this time the Waver was cutter rigged and was reckoned a fast sailer.

This year Mr Smith parted with the 'Remen' and required the 'Name' a much layer and in way way more commodious night. But she was very different then from what she became afterwards under the many judicious improvements which Mr Smith made upon her. She appeared very ground to me however when on Mr Smith's invitation I went on board on (I think) the 26th of September - for I never had been on board any other youth but the 'Remen' and the much layer dimensions and superior accommodation of the 'Trave' struck me as something very fine indeed. The Cabin of the Roman was, necessarily, very small and the most came down through it-becoring on one side of it, whom I first saw it, the marks of the heirs of Dr. Scoulers boots which in a former cruise had been indented in it by the Doctor supporting himself ajount the Mast while the yacht lay on his licam ends on an oc casion where she had were aground. At this time the
